

Changing Perspectives

First brainstorming activity 4-22

What have you learned in the past?	Votes
I've learned that people are not always ready for the change I've suggested. But at a later time they will come back and be ready.	5
We all think we're right, right up until we find out we're wrong.	3
It is hard when they may have to admit that there is new info/a different way to do what they've always done. They're scared	3
Hard to maintain a coaching stance when I am passionate about my belief and they are "stuck" Maintaining compassion for their perspective takes extra work.	2
We teach confidence in early years but we don't teach students how to say "I don't know"	2
People don't want to think about something complicated. They often hit a point of complexity and then default to another authority	1
Click the green circle with the plus to create a sticky note. Then start to type. When you are finished, click outside the note.	0
Peggy It's really hard to get someone to change their view if they don't want to change.	0
They have a fix mind set and no matter what you say they will not change.	0
